TOM BRADY IS COMING OUT OF RETIREMENT (AGAIN)

Thomas Edward Patrick Brady is coming out of retirement once again. The 7-time Super Bowl champion announced on X (formerly known as twitter) earlier this week that he was coming back out of retirement for the second time in three years. This could be likely due to the abrupt vacancy Quarterback that the New York Jets have seen. 2 weeks ago, during week 1 of the NFL season, the Jets new signing quarterback Aaron Rodgers injured his Achilles after only 3 offensive snaps. The injury sidelines the star quarterback for the remainder of the season, leaving many to question what the New York franchise will do to supplement the issue, until now. Tom Brady’s announcement comes almost 2 weeks after the Rodger’s injury, and it leaves many to believe that the star quarter back is coming back to give the Jets a bit of that “Tom Brady

Magic.” This new little post-epilogue chapter of the already legendary story is a chapter that many writer’s mouths are watering for. If Tom Brady were to sign with the Jets it would see him play against the very team that made him who he is, the New England Patriots. In his nearly 20 years with New England, Brady brought the Patriots to 9 super bowls, winning 6 of them. Breaking nearly every record possible for quarterback in the process and now we could possibly see him play against that very team twice in the regular season. Brady has beaten every franchise in the NFL, including his beloved Patriots back in 2021 when the Tampa Bay Buccaneers traveled to New England. Only time will tell for Mr. Brady.
